DeCrescente Distributing

Matthew DeCrescente is an IT Manager who has spent almost his whole career working in different capacities in a family-owned business. He began at DeCrescente Distributing (DDC) in 2005 when the company was on the cusp of having to learn to use the digital advancements happening in the business world. Matthew helped to lead the charge as he took on the task of changing workforce mindset. Having to surmount the way business had always been done, he significantly moved his department's workload forward using digital solutions to streamline old manual processes. His steerage in technological advancements and processes have served as a model for other distributors and industry-related organizations.

Now approaching his second decade working in this capacity and serving as a member of the company's senior staff, Matthew recognizes what drives productivity and how to work through team dynamics. In addition to his professional resume, Matt is an active, contributing member of the community, serving in various capacities on charitable committees and mentorship programs.

Matthew holds a BS in Computer Science from Siena College.
